Program Theme

Following the twin shocks of COVID-19 and the Russia-Ukraine war, the globalization of the world economy faces powerful headwinds as governments design policies such as export controls that interfere with natural comparative advantages in order to protect domestic economies and strengthen national security. Such policies usually arise from geopolitical considerations, but affect a wide range of economic activity, such as input sourcing, supply-chain development, standards and regulations, and access to capital.

RAND Corporation, USA and IMPRI, India are conducting an online program on the implications for Asia of geopolitical trends on economic globalization. The program will cover the socio-economic, diplomatic and national security considerations that are shaping government policies on globalization, the role of multilateral institutions, policy design, and the implications for Asia, including India. The sessions will be conducted by experts from PRGS and RAND Corporation.
